

The first set of tests conducted by Professor Weber-Wulff clearly demonstrated that Turnitin had some areas where improvement was required. In particular this was a lack of German Wikipedia content. We were already planning on adding the content, but the report made this a priority and within 3 weeks we have been able to rerun the tests with the added content. By following the same metric as Professor Weber-Wulff we have updated the table of results, as can be seen below.

This set of results gives a score of 35 which puts Turnitin in second place in the table.
